An ode to Coalinga

So, after three years, I decided to go to Coalinga for the football homecoming. I didn't go to see who I would run into, because running into friends from the past is inevitable. I have to say, that the older I get, the more I realize how much I despise Coalinga.

Every time I look at where I am at, where I am going and what I have become, I can't help but look at everyone else as if they haven't matured nor broken out of the Coalinga norms; I don't blame them. Its actually a little pathetic and sad. These people have a lot, and I mean, a lot to learn, alot to experience, and more to overcome. They are merely beginning new phases in their lives that will prove more difficult as time goes by.

I don't give them my sympathy for I was always two steps ahead of the game; always had the advantage of being far and secluded from everyone in Coalinga because I had ambitions and aspirations that kept me focused. I never diverted from what was more important in my life; and with that note, I still haven't.

I'm on my way to becoming a lawyer. One bad *** corporate latina lawyer who is not going to take **** from anyone, or anything. Ill be up there soon enough to help out mi raza in every way possible. Looking back at the people I saw in Coalinga this weekend...I pity them. They say that the friendships you make in college are the ones that are true and the ones that last a lifetime. I'm a firm beleiver in that.

When I look back to my friends from Coalinga, I don't miss a single moment with them because the moments were never real. Instead; I find that here in college, I am immersed in an intellectual environment where individuals here value hard work and commitment in all aspects of their lives, and who have worked their asses off to come to a school as prestigious as UCB...those are the friends I admire; the people who can hold conversations of substance and value...people whom are going to be doctors, and lawyers, politicians, psychologists, etc...in a society where we will all stand aside one another because we have all been. through the educational struggles similarly.

I don't care much for Coalinga, or the people that reside there or the friends I used to have while being there. In comparison to my college friends, they are nothing, were nothing, and remain nothing. In a nutshell, their histories and reputations are so denigrating and their focuses are set on such superficial, and unimportant things that breaking out of it for an instant scares them....it's no wonder they always come back to Coalinga...they can never be others businesses abhors me. Why don't they focus on themselves and see their status in to them, just as much as their society? Its nothing...so get over yourselves. How tembly sad. It must be a small town thing...or maybe a close-minded group of individuals who are afraid of change. I think inside these individuals (and you all know who you are) know they can't make it in life. Their only way of success is by criticizing those around them, as if doing so will make them feel better about themselves. You all have alor to learn...I pray to Gad that you see the light one day.
