When Did NPE Go To China

- 2005 or slightly before
- Acquiring Chinese Patents vs. Acquiring Chinese invention ideas
- No Patent NPE litigation found in China - yet
- Intellectual Property concept was introduced to China, China plays a more “follower” position
China Investment Environment for NPEs

- Setting up a Patent Pool
- New to Chinese Investors
- Foreign investors faced constrains on investment amount as well as “policy” bottle neck
- Damage Calculation
Thoughts – Three Possibilities

- NPEs and PEs to include China as a battlefield in a multi-nation patent war – Roger Sang: “Are NPE Coming to China”
- Foreign (global) entities will likely become initial targets of Chinese or none Chinese NPE in China;
- Main “Gain” of an NPE does not seem to come from damage (how to make a NPE profitable in China still needs some creative thinking);
- Initial NPE setups may have foreign investment, but the most successful model which will appear a bit later will be domestic business model.
Some Numbers from 2010

Trend of Patent Enforcement in China

- Numbers of litigations are growing (based on 2010 data)
  - First instance patent cases: 5,785
  - Preliminary Injunction: 55 (90% success rate)
  - Preliminary Preservation of Evidences: 294
  - Preliminary Preservation of Assets: 126

- Damage awards are increasing
  - Historically low, 90% IPR cases <$100k, with average $15K
  - More cases with big awards
    - Domestic winning: Schneider ($50m); FKK ($7.6m); Samsung ($7.5m)
    - Foreign winning: Neoplan ($3.2m); Ashland ($3.5m)

- Injunctions are available
  - Preliminary few
  - Permanent common

- Practical challenges for patentees
  - Damage calculations can be tricky
    - Patentee’s actual losses
    - Infringer’s profit gains
    - Reasonable multiple of royalty
    - Statutory damage up to 1 million RMBs (~$150K)
  - Evidence gathering is the key
    - Preservation
    - Collection
    - Accounting audit
