Introduction

Faculty scholarship represents the intellectual life of a law school. To feature our faculty’s scholarly efforts, the reference staff at Heafey Law Library maintains a database of the published scholarship of full-time faculty and other academic staff currently in residence at Santa Clara Law (http://law.scu.edu/faculty/bibliographies.cfm). This database consists of all publications of faculty through their tenure at Santa Clara. As the law school began to make plans to celebrate its centennial birthday it seemed appropriate for the law library to contribute to the occasion. What more fitting way to mark this historic milestone than to have the library staff create a permanent record of all faculty scholarship by expanding our current bibliography to encompass the scholarly contributions of our faculty from the founding of the law school.

Who were our faculty, how were we to identify them, and finally how to discover their scholarly publications? Thus began the journey that has resulted in the publication of this centennial bibliography. Little did I realize when I volunteered to undertake this task what lay ahead of me. I soon discovered that no comprehensive list of law school faculty existed. Thus it was necessary to first research who had taught at the law school. The University Archives, armed with pencil and paper, was the first (and frequently revisited) stop on what became an 18-month journey of discovery. Combing through old SCU Bulletins trying to identify who was on the law faculty presented quite the challenge. The earliest law school bulletins unearthed were published in the 1940s. The early Santa Clara University bulletins did not have a separate listing for law faculty. Between university bulletins, law school bulletins, the AALS Law Teachers Directory (thank goodness for digital access!), and building on Judge Mark Thomas’ research I was able to identify substantially all SCU Law faculty from 1911 to the present day. I discovered that the early faculties were small in number and consisted primarily of local practitioners and members of the bench. In the early years it was difficult to distinguish between full-time and part-time faculty, I included all faculty found during those years.

1 The current faculty bibliography includes all full time tenured and tenure-track faculty, affiliated faculty, emeriti, and various categories of academic staff. Not included are visiting faculty and lecturers (known elsewhere as adjunct faculty).
2 Since faculty scholarship is considered during the hiring process, our bibliography consists of all faculty publications including those prior to the faculty’s tenure at Santa Clara Law. The centennial bibliography follows this practice.
3 Mark Thomas, From promise to prominence: the Santa Clara University School of Law (2003).
The first question answered, the next hurdle to overcome was to discover the faculty publications. Since the current faculty bibliography highlights all faculty scholarship prior to and through their connection with Santa Clara Law, this centennial bibliography continues that practice. This task, which would have been painstakingly slow using print indexes, was made manageable using a variety of online resources. Utilizing LegalTrac, Index to Legal Periodicals and Books, HeinOnline, Library of Congress catalog, WorldCat and other online library catalogs, Lexis and Westlaw databases, as well as conducting manual searches of early non-indexed Santa Clara Law publications resulted in this centennial bibliography. Generally if the scholarship was indexed or independently verified it is included. However there may be many articles, in particular those authored by our early faculty, although published are in journals not covered by the usual indexes and thus were not discovered during my research. The scope of coverage extends from 1911 (or earlier) through the end of 2010.

While this bibliography is intended to be comprehensive it is not exhaustive. For both content and format I followed the existing guidelines used in maintaining Santa Clara Law’s current list of faculty publications which can be found on Santa Clara Law’s website, as mentioned above. Included in the bibliography are those works which were published and independently verified. Thus works in progress, forthcoming publications, articles in newspapers of general circulation, or op-ed pieces are not included. As publications are discovered they will be added to the database on Santa Clara Law’s website.

I hope that you find this collection of faculty scholarship to be of interest. The almost 2500 entries illustrate the broad scope and changing interests of our faculty who have contributed so much to make Santa Clara Law the institution that it is today.

LARAW Instructors

Originally Legal Research was taught by student teaching assistants. Beginning with the 1981/82 academic year Teaching Fellows were hired to teach Legal Research. During the 1986/87 academic year instructors hired to teach Legal Research were given the title Legal Research and Writing Instructors. During the 1993/94 academic year Legal Research and Writing was changed to Legal Analysis, Research, and Writing (LARAW)
